(10) Read this paragraph and answer the questions given below.

Child abuse

Children living on and off the streets are considered a problem in the society. The number of children living on & off the streets are increasing in areas like Colombo, Katharagama and Anuradhapura.

The present education system does not attract the children living on streets. The education system caters towards the academic courses and not to prepare a backward child to live. The education level they have reached does not allow these children to find suitable employment. Being unable to earn an income brings them to the streets to make a living.

The child who is not going to school during the day is also an easy prey of drug dealers and underworld gangs. They use the young children to transport drugs and dangerous weapons to locations, as children will not be suspected to be involved in such activities. The children at young age get involved and learn such trade because of the money they get, and in the end, a habit is inculcated in them. Once they become targets of the police they will be always eyed at, even if they don't commit any crime.

Earning an income attracts the child and his family much more than going to school. Using younger children to beg on the streets fetches some parents a tidy income. To overcome this problem of street children, the Government has launched a programme for street children. This programme will be implemented by the Department of Human Resource Development, in Cllaboration with a non Governmental Organization. Technical assistance for the programme will be given by the non-formal and special education unit of the ministry of education and other resource persons specialized in the field of conducting functional literacy and numeracy programmes. They have planned to develop community learning centres in 15 districts. These centres will provide children an environment to learn through creativity and activity. The children will be channeled to the centre through NGOs, Municipality, Public health personnel and other relevant organization.
