"The train came straight at me and then went over as if I was in a pit under the wheels and it rumbled like thunder and there was a red light which glowed like a monstrous eye and became bigger and burst in a flash of white and everything became still and dark and silent; the train came again and the whole sequence repeated itself, over and over again like a looped movie... and I became larger and larger like a balloon being inflated; hands bloated like dead fish and I felt my head expanding, pressurized from within; through it all there was the sound of water dripping; rain falling on the tiled roof, rain leaking through and falling drip drip into something; rain rain go away come again another day and Rita was trying to get me to say it properly - it's not Jo but go... say it... go and I wasn't getting the hard 'G' sound and kept saying 'rain rain jo away' and I was seated on Rita's lap and she smelled of Yardley's Lavender Talcum from the nice jar with the golden lid with a silver coloured label with a woman in a frilly dress... and then came the train again screaming hissing puffing with the red monster's eye and it rolled over me again and something exploded in a deep boom and now I was feeling cold and my legs were shivering knees knocking against each other..."
